SkyWest Airlines Pilots Vote to Remain Union Free

For Immediate Release

ST. GEORGE, November 7, 2007 – SkyWest Airlines pilots voted Tuesday to maintain the airline’s open-door culture – a cornerstone of the Company’s 35-year success. In a vote conducted by the National Mediation Board in Washington, D.C., more than 65 percent of SkyWest Airlines’ pilots voted to remain union free, rejecting the Air Line Pilots Association’s efforts to become their bargaining representative.

“We are pleased with our pilots’ decision to reject third-party representation and to maintain our current relationship,” said Chip Childs, SkyWest Airlines president and chief operating officer. “SkyWest’s future is certainly positive, and we are pleased our pilots recognize that we can accomplish great things together as we work toward continued opportunity for our airline and our employees.”

“We appreciate our pilots’ decision to remain union free, and the professionalism they displayed during this campaign,” continued Brad Holt, SkyWest’s vice president – flight operations. “This vote is an endorsement of the relationship that has worked so well throughout our history.”

SkyWest has been union free for more than 35 years, and the airline is dedicated to working with all employee groups to establish an environment of competitive wages, good working conditions and opportunity for personal and professional growth.
